WASHINGTON'S MARRIAGE TO MARTHA CUSTIS.—Soon after Washington had resigned his military commission and a few months prior to his election to the House of Burgesses, he was married January 6, 1759, to Martha Dandridge, widow of Daniel Parke Custis. She was a person of breeding, dignified in society, and adequate to become the "First Lady." Although it is generally considered that she had little influence on Washington's public career, she fulfilled something much nearer to his heart, as Washington suggested to an English correspondent soon after his marriage: "I am now I believe fixed at this seat with an agreeable Consort for Life. And Hope to find more happiness in retirement than I ever experienced amidst a wide and bustling World." Of the two children by Martha Washington's former marriage, John Parke and Martha (or "Patsy"), all the world knows of the tender care and devotion with which Washington treated them as though they were his own, and the happiness that they in turn instilled in him.

His scientific reputation, his dignity of character, and his charm of manner gained him much favor in their society; and his matchless diplomacy and wisdom gained for a country that was bankrupt and despondent, the financial aid and concessions which probably no other man could have possibly obtained. Soon after Burgoyne's defeat, Franklin was formally received at the Court of France on February 6, 1778, and was successful in effecting an offensive and defensive alliance with that power. This treaty resulted in much rejoicing in the Colonies and did much to stimulate and revive their hopes in the Colonists' fight for independence.

Constructed with their exteriors heavily iron-clad, each possessed advanced combating features as to make easy prey of the then prevailing wooden ships. On March 8, the Merrimac had destroyed with perfect ease two Federal ships and would have continued her bravado the next morning had it not been for the sudden appearance of the Monitor, resembling a "cheese-box-on-a-raft." Furiously the contest raged for approximately four hours, and when neither ship could gain the advantage both withdrew.

DE SOTO DISCOVERS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.—It was the lure of mythical gold that brought Fernando DeSoto to Florida in 1539. Here a tollsome westward procession began with about 200 horses and 600 men, including priests, Spanish cavaliers, and Indian captives. For two years they searched in vain for gold. In the latter part of April, 1541, they reached the Mississippi River—this was probably not far from the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude. In the presence of natives a huge pine cross was erected and DeSoto claimed the river in the name of Spain. Further attempts were made to discover the wealth and magnificence which they had set out to find in Florida, but all were in vain. DeSoto, chagrined by a conviction of total failure, sank under his disappointment and died May 21, 1542. In the stillness of the night, his body was wrapped in a mantle and then slipped into the Mississippi—to sleep beneath the waters that he had discovered.

R. E. LEE AT "STONEWALL" JACKSON'S GRAVE.—During the Civil War when General "Stonewall" Jackson's left arm was amputated to save his life, after he had been accidentally shot there by one of his own men, General Robert E. Lee viewed with grave alarm the consequences of Jackson's disability for much depended on his leadership. However, this emergency did not prolong the life of this great Confederate officer. Jackson died on May 10, 1863, rendering the Confederacy a severe blow; and his remains were buried, according to his wishes, in Lexington, Va., where he had held a professorship of military tactics in the Lexington Military Academy. Jackson had been a tower of strength in every campaign in which he had participated, and was the most able of all the officers who served under Lee. He was nicknamed "Stonewall" during the Battle of Bull Run when General Bee remarked: "There stands Jackson, like a stonewall."

In this new country Penn sought a refuge for his coreligionists where they might practice their convictions in perfect freedom and unmolested peace. The first purchase of land from the Indians for the propriety was made in July, 1682, and subsequent purchases were made on June 23 and 25, 1683, and on the following July 14th. On June 23 a great treaty was formulated wherein "great promises passed between him and the Indians of kindness and good neighborhood, and that the Indians and English must live in love as long as the sun should give light."

HENRY CLAY'S APPEAL TO THE SENATE. —Henry Clay, venerable for his years and a long life devoted to public service as one of America's greatest statesmen, on the fifth day of February, 1850, undertook an elaborate defense of his eight resolutions which he had presented to the Senate on January 29th. These resolutions were his efforts to provide a basis of compromise for the firm and lasting settlement of the slavery question which was creating a bitter, if not hostile, feeling between the North and South. With a matchless eloquence of earnest and effecting terms, Clay's speech excited much attention, and its sentiments were approved by a large portion of the people. His efforts were largely responsible for effecting the Compromise of 1850. It was the sixty-eighth year of his life, and his death resulted after a brief illness of but twenty-four hours. As word spread, the tidings rendered the nation to profound amazement and sorrow, for no intelligence of the slightest illness had preceded the shocking announcement of his death. Those opinions of the internationally-loved Washington, which were shared by all—from the humblest to the highest—can best be summed: "First in War, First in Peace, First in the Hearts of His Countrymen."

PERRY'S VICTORY ON LAKE ERIE.—Although England has been acclaimed the "Mistress of the Seas," the foreign nations were to receive added proof of the naval superiority of the young American fleet. The American flotilla under Commodore Perry in the ship "Lawrence," engaged the British squadron in battle on the morning of September 10, 1813. During the first part of the battle the British ships concentrated their fire on Perry's flagship the "Lawrence," which became so completely disabled that Perry left her and shifted his flag to the "Niagara." Soon after Perry mounted the deck of the "Niagara," he was successful in the bold expedient of breaking the enemy's line and continued to victory. Perry then sent his famous message, "We have met the enemy, and they are ours."

THE REVOLT AGAINST COLUMBUS.—During Christopher Columbus' epoch-making voyage to the New World, the men who accompanied him became frightened over the seeming foolishness of the enterprise when for many, many days they had steered a westward course from home and had seen no trace of land. Discouraged and full of complaint, they grew rebellious when they sensed the possibility of being left to their fate in the middle of the ocean. After several reproaches by Columbus, they wanted to force him to return to Spain, even threatening him with violence. Although sensing the danger of his position, Columbus was unaffected by their mob psychology and very impassive to their cries, maintaining a very cool disposition concerning the whole affair; and when he explained to them in a masterly way the certainty of soon sighting land, which could not be far away, he was successful in subduing the revolt.

The religious persecution to which they had been subjected in their mother country—on account of their separation from the Church of England—resulted in their migrating to America and landing at the far-famed Plymouth Rock on December 21, 1620. Needless to say, that first winter wrought many hardships; but the following harvest, which resulted in a favorable yield, Governor Bradley made provisions for a day of thanksgiving and prayer for God's gifts of food, courage, hope, and religious freedom. With the Pilgrims the friendly Indians partook of the feast at which time all pledged again their friendship and cooperation.

WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE. —The latter part of the year 1776 found the Colonists' best troops captured, forts surrendered, and much territory in the possession of the enemy. Facing these discouraging losses, Washington retreated to the western bank of the Delaware with less than four thousand men—the wreck of the Continental Army. Still determined that their independence was not a lost cause, on a Christmas night in a driving storm of sleet, amid drifting ice, General Washington crossed the Delaware, and on the morning of Dec. 26, 1776, fell upon the Hessians at Trenton in the midst of their Christmas festivities. He captured one thousand prisoners, mortally wounded their leader, Colonel Rahl, and escaped safely to camp.			1 1816 Baltimore, Maryland First City to Use Illuminating Gas	2 1823  Monroe Doctrine An- nounced by Pres.
